About the Photographer

When you look at an object, say a flower, for instance, some may only see just that. When I look through a camera lens, I see the object in so many different ways. I see it's beauty, its flaws and its possibilities.

I am a mom of three, who decided to one day take my interest in photography further than just random action shots of my family, friends at our local school events.

It was after a session at Deep Cut Gardens that I realized that even though I did enjoy photographing people, taking photos of nature and flowers really peaked my interest.

When I started shooting in macro and close up is when I really started to feel a passion for it. To see the details in the petals of a flower, or the uniqueness of a snowflake ignited my love for taking pictures.

Since then, I have taken the opportunity to photograph at the Philadelphia Flower Show as well as many county parks. One of my photographs was also on display last year at a photo exhibit at Deep Cut Gardens.

Next time you walk past a tree, flowering plant or garden, take the time to stop and really explore them up close. You will discover so many beautiful details in life, as I have. I hope you enjoy my work.
