About the Displays

Edna Newlands always had a talent for sketching and began to study art in her high school years. She went on to work in business as a secretary and to raise a family. As her children grew older, Edna went back to art classes and began to paint mostly in oils and watercolors. Her subjects ranged from landscapes to portraits. As she grew older she was diagnosed with Parkinson Disease which limited her ability to paint, and ultimately took her life. This collection is a sample of her work which is now owned and cherished by her family.
